Dear Christie A. Preston:

I understand that at present all non-profits except churches must file a form 990 in which they justify the tax-exemption status they seek. This practice by the IRS implies that churches are more moral than other organizations and need not establish their bona fides. This 'free-pass' granted churches is naïve and opens the door to all forms of financial chicanery that all unregulated institutions fall victim to. Examples of what I'm talking about are too numerous to mention. The only fair and safe policy that would protect society and individuals against all forms of fraud is to demand that all organizations without exemption file a form 990 as often as they wish to invoke tax-exempt status.

Sincerely,

Arnold Asrelsky
