We Americans living abroad are treated as collateral damage in the war against overseas tax evasion and money laundering. I have lived in Australia for 55 years and I file a US tax return every year as required. I have never earned enough foreign income to require me to pay US tax but it is hard to find accountants here who even understand US tax laws. I don't understand US tax laws, and I resent being treated like a criminal and having to tell the US government how much money I have in my bank account. Are Americans living in America required to hand over that information? I love my country and would never renounce my citizenship, but please stop treating me like a criminal. You do know that the only other country which taxes its citizens wherever they may live is Eritrea. A third world shithole! Surely the US is better than that. Bring in territorial taxation and revoke FATCA.
