This comment is being submitted by Carol Graham, Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution and College Park Professor at UMD. I am an expert in subjective well-being and ill-being, and have been finding robust associations (and even some predictive qualities ) in our metrics of well-being and ill-being and propensity to deaths of despair and their underlying causes at the level of individuals, race, and place (counties) at a nationwide level. My comments suggests a modest inclusion of a few well-being questions in the surveys for both employers and providers.
