General Comment

It's laughable that the Social Security Administration believed completing a Continuing Disability Review form takes just 60 minutes. It takes hours to gather proper information and documentation and then probably 2 hours for me to complete the form. I have a learning disability that causes my handwriting to be illegible and so writing and long forms take me a considerable amount of time and effort but also combined with my mental health diagnoses these forms and interviews also cause me stress and anxiety which requires me to break up the time I spend doing it into two days. Mind you these forms and SSA policies are hard for people like me to understand. Some disability lawyers say you need a law degree to fully understand SSA policies, forms and processes and SSA doesn't provide any funding to nonprofits or lawyers to help disabled people. If we violate a policy unknowingly? We're at fault!
