General Comment

Mandates are only necessary where the people fail to act toward their own betterment. I am not completely anti-mandate, but at this point, we are still slowly increasing in vaccination percentage. If we reach a total plateau and are still struggling to keep COVID infections under control, I say go for it with the mandates. However, it has to be framed appropriately. Any messaging regarding any mandate is never going to reach the far right; but messaging can still reach the reasonable people still hesitant to being vaccinated. The messenger is also important. There are reasonable people that will not listen to President Biden or Dr. Fauci, so, if a mandate is ever necessary, we need to find someone that they are still open to receiving the message from. I believe this administration has our best interests in mind regarding COVID. We can get through it with the right message.
