In 1994 Ukraine signed the Budapest Memorandum; giving up its status as the world's 3rd largest Nuclear Superpower. In exchange for giving up it's nuclear arsenal, Ukraine was given assurance by Russia, The United States and Great Britain that it's sovereignty and existing borders would be recognized and respected and that the countries would come to Ukraine's aid through the UN Security Council (which Russia sits on and has obfuscated efforts to aid Ukraine via UN). In 2014 Russia invaded the Crimean region and the world largely looked away and today the entire country is a bomb target.

We have a moral imperative to help Ukraine. They gave up their strongest defense based on our promises of protection. We do not wish to provoke World War 3; so the very least we can do is take refugees and give them a safe place to restart their lives. I know many Ukrainians living in the United States. They are peaceful, intelligent, hard working people who share our ideals of freedom and democracy and contribute to our society. To turn our backs on the people we promised we'd protect is morally wrong, but it's also not in our best interest. These folks will be productive members of our society. 100,000 refugees seems like a drop in the bucket when Europe is looking at millions. I urge you to drop quotas and let folks desirous of coming here from a ravaged Ukraine come.
