General Comment

I receive SSDI. I have completed a CDR more than once. Each time it took me at least two hours, up to four hours, to collect all of the information required on the form. At least once, it took me a painful three hours to fill in the forms by hand, because I had trouble accessing the forms online. Why do I need to continue to prove that I am still disabled since I have a childhood illness that began in the 1960's? I have continued to have joint damage over the years. I have a weakened and compromised immune system. There is no cure for my condition. Isn't it a waste of my time and government resources to keep sending these forms?
