The response is voluntary. Is that clearly stated in the information request to these contractors? If they know it is voluntary it is likely that they will not share this information; a mandatory response might help glean more information (though it would be highly unpopular). This is also written in extremely vague fashion; what kind of request for information will be made? Is this a survey? Or a report that they need to submit back with information on their security incidents (including details like IP addresses, tactics, malicious files discovered, antiviruses avoided, etc.)? If I was a contractor looking at this report I would have no idea what is expected of me and thus would probably avoid it altogether.
