Dear Ms. Fendrich-Turner,

Thank you for your comment regarding the FSIS information collection renewal for swine slaughter inspection.

Because FSIS is the party that takes enforcement action, FSIS already has records on the number of enforcement actions.

Dear Ms. Kouba, As USDA FSIS renews the approved information collection regarding swine slaughter inspection, there is an opportunity for USDA to enhance the quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected. Specifically, FSIS should request that establishments also provide USDA with the number of official enforcement actions FSIS has taken against the establishment that quarter (or year) due to being in violation of the Humane Methods of Slaughter Act.

Swine slaughter establishments operating under NSIS should have this enforcement information readily available for their facilities and be asked for this as part of the reporting process to make this easy for FSIS employees to see data all in one location.

This is a very good opportunity for FSIS to enhance the quality and utility of information being collected by the regulated community.

Warmly,

Katy
