General Comment

I think this is a joke... you took a process that took minutes to do, and created an inefficient means to get the information. This new process may work well for a company that does minimal transactions in a year. However, some of us do larger quantities and this is going to go from taking minutes to hours. You are expecting us to do double entry in some cases, between importing data into our own system, and then again in yours. I cannot believe that someone thought this was even a feasible idea to do. And you are expecting that everyone's systems operate the same way and should have no trouble getting the data out of it. Which is not the case. I will be very disappointed to see this system go through. Keep the old one. You are asking for information that you shouldn't even need.
