This attestation common form states that one way software producers can submit this form by providing:

Software Producer: Software Producers name which manufactured/compiled the software product

Product name: Complete name of software product

Version: Version number of software product

Attestation date: Date the software product was attested:

e.g. [Software Producer]_[Product]_[Version]_[Attestation Date]

Acme_SecuritySuite_4.6.2.1_20230124

Emailing the completed PDF to < EMAIL

But then it later says that software producers within this attestation form may do this:

If this attestation is for an individual product, multiple products, or product line, provide the software name, version number, and release/publish date to which this attestation applies. (with a table included to list multiple items.)

So an attestation can be submitted by a software producer saying it's for a particular product and version number, but within that attestation document have all kinds of additional software listed/be attested to in the same document? This will cause all kinds of record keeping problems for agencies--particularly contracting officers. Especially if one of the additional products has a major version change. Please reconsider this as it is adding complexity that benefits no one. Thank you.
