It's unclear whether the ability to generate an attestation form for a product line was removed or not. The text still mentions it, but the check box is gone. Being able to attest for a product line is highly beneficial in my opinion to avoid overhead of issuing new attestations too frequently when new versions are released.

Requiring the CEO or COO to sign the document is very restrictive; opening it up to any C-level or executive leader would be helpful and in certain cases would make more sense. For example, a CTO or CSO would be a good resource who actually knows more about the technical details than the CEO.
