Since my horrific experience a decade or so ago when FBAR suddenly appeared as a threat at the end of the summer, giving me insufficient time to get a paper declaration from my foreign address to Detroit by Labor Day (and I was forced to register with some sort of online federal criminal registry in order to avoid prosecution), I have remained completely confused about the requirements of FBAR.

A basic restructuring of the program might help to alleviate some of the public's confusion and get FBAR focused on the real issues of tax fraud.

Thanks.
