It's very unfair that the US government taxes citizens living overseas. We have to pay taxes to the country where we live, and that's as it should be, because we use the public facilities provided to us as residents of that country. Why should we also pay the US when we don't spend time there? Other countries do not inflict this burden upon their citizens. It is a financial burden and it is an emotional burden because it is so complicated and difficult to comply with, especially for us older US citizens who are spending our retirement abroad. In fairness and justice to US citizens, the US tax laws should be changed to reflect the reality of the lives of law-abiding expats. Thank you.
