The United States is one of a tiny handful of countries with citizen based taxation. Being taxed where one lives means paying for the infrastructure that one benefits from. Anything else is clearly an unfair and unnecessary burden. The fact that even my daughters are subject to this unusual rule, particularly as one left the United States with us when she was two years old and the other never lived in the United States, shines a particular light on this glaring mistake. Please, please, see to it that this is changed.
