Thank you for the opportunity to comment-

I am a long-term American living abroad and always feel burdened and anxious when it's time to file my US taxes which I never have to pay as have been part-time and always earn below the foreign earned income threshold, and the fbar. I agree completely with the Americans abroad body which points out that overwhelmingly Americans living, working, raising families abroad do not break the law by money laundering, etc. Also, they point out that the threshold hasn't been reviewed in decades.

Thank you for considering all our comments including the IRS's, and not increasing stress on us when life is clearly stressful enough, as I can imagine you also know.
