I think it is a fantastic idea to begin to survey on LGBTQ+ household diversity, but I worry about the ability to accurately capture the population in households where the person filling out the survey is not aware of an LGBTQ+ person in their household (they are closeted) or is aware and is purposefully providing false information out of a lack of cooperation with that person's sexual identity. Since this is a highly stigmatized and vulnerable population, we must be very careful how the question is phrased, and allow for people to opt-out of that question. I would love to know the census tracts where the population is higher for LGBTQ+ people to provide better resources to that community.
