I'd like to express my support for the inclusion of questions regarding gender identity and sexual orientation on the American Community Survey. This addition could provide invaluable data for understanding and addressing inequalities in housing and employment based on these factors.

However, I acknowledge that individuals in marginalized categories may feel apprehensive about disclosing such sensitive information, fearing exposure to discrimination. To encourage honest responses, it would be beneficial for the Census Bureau to provide information on how they will ensure the privacy and security of this data. Assurances regarding confidentiality could help alleviate concerns and facilitate more accurate reporting.
