I oppose the plan to eliminate the Academic Libraries survey. I work in a public library and we use data collected by state and federal governments to make sure we are providing adequate services to our patrons. Academic libraries similarly need data to assess their collections and services and make sure they are receiving the funding and support from their colleges and universities, and state and federal funding. Taking away this rich data source would be a disservice to all Academic libraries, and to the students and faculty at the institutions they serve.
