I'm a person of few words. By ceasing the library portion of the report, you are sending a clear message to universities, "Libraries don't matter, the information they provide doesn't contribute to the overall success of students, faculty, or the university as a whole." The powers that be spend too much on the Internet and not enough time in libraries. Libraries are where learning takes place through study and research. A quiet place to absorb the information given in class, do the necessary research involved in critical thinking, and where students study and commune with others. Don't leave libraries out in the cold!

More words than originally planned. What can I say? I was on a roll.
