Instead of preventing people from seeking safety from persecution and sending them back to potentially life threatening situations the US and Biden administration should rescind this proclamation and reaffirm its commitment to helping asylum seekers and refugees and instead focus on providing and expanding protection for both asylum seekers and migrants seeking family reunification.

A good idea would be to instead focus on providing more aid to these migrants and alleviate their suffering. We would then provide a safe avenue for admission and help them in accordance with the laws of the US constitution and the international laws the US signed. This would be a more humanitarian approach and would result in a safer experience for these migrants who have already suffered a lot.
