Are you familiar with the Lancet Commission on women, power, and cancer?

What best describes your role?

Why evaluate?

- The work of the Lancet Commission on women, power, and cancer extends beyond the report
- Monitoring and evaluation can:
  - Serve as an indicator of research and implementation priorities
  - Measure progress and identify gaps early in implementation
  - Allow for reflexive learning and adaption
  - Provide benchmarks for scaling efforts
- Evaluation is especially valuable for the work of this commission due to the scarcity of research and available data on the topic

Monitoring & Evaluation Framework

M&E Workgroup process

12 commissioners, 1 mentee, and 4 external M&E experts engaged in a modified Delphi process to create an M&E framework and indicators.

- Proposed indicators based on scoping review and expertise
- 2. Screened indicators for duplicates and feasibility
- 3. Prioritized indicators
- 4. Stratified indicators into two tiers

M&E Workgroup process

12 commissioners, 1 mentee, and 4 external M&E experts engaged in a modified Delphi process to create an M&E framework and indicators.

- 31 total indicators
  - 20 Tier 1
  - 11 Tier 2
- Emphasis on relevance to the Commission's 10 key recommendations, technical feasibility, and alignment with Commission priorities

Challenges

- Novelty and scope
- Technical feasibility
- Political will
- Questions of accountability
- Contextual differences
- Lack of standardization of fundamental concepts

Enabling factors and examples

What are examples of policies or programs from your work that could benefit from evaluation with a gender and intersectional lens?

Who should be accountable for monitoring and evaluation progress towards these recommendations?
