I agree that individuals who were formally incarcerated should have the chance to work for a bank or credit union if they wanted to do so. This would ensure fair equity for all, and gives individuals who were formally incarcerated a second chance. Working for a bank or credit union is a great job with good benefits, and allowing these individuals the same opportunity to get this job as other members of society would give them a sense of belonging in society, and an opportunity to grow. An individuals' past does not define who they are, and they should not have to dwell on that forever. They should be able to grow and learn from their decisions.
