

Author Full Name : A KReceived Date : 01/11/2025 01:36 PMComments Received :

Instead of constantly “re-evaluating” the CDC “Guidelines”, they just need to be completely removed. They were initially created on no or very low quality evidence that even the FDA rebuked & denied them for. They were created by people with conflicts of interests as well as most lacking any pain management education. The CDC knew from the start they would cause harm that was acknowledged even within the CDC itself. Any fake attempts to correct this are for show. Patients requiring opioid pain medications are still regularly being harmed. We don’t need more comment periods, meetings, focus groups, etc. We need to allow doctors to properly treat their patients. This goes beyond just the CDC & the “Guidelines” at this point, but it is one of the main jumping points that needs to be revoked completely.