My daughter has multiple health issues requiring pain medication to function. That she has a qualified physician who has treated her for years and prescribes these medications and still due to the tight reign on certain drugs she has spend hours each month making sure they are submitted to insurance then sent to the pharmacy so there are ready on pickup day. Then she has to hope theu didn't give them to someone that walked in with a prescription before she got there to pick. If this happens and it does frequently she goes into detox, which in itself painful. She has to wait for the pharmacy to get more in. Meanwhile she's unable to function and suffering.

It seems since the DEA has had input this has become as issue. If it were you who needed these medications would you want to go through this month after month. Or if was someone you loved crying in the pain and the effects of detoxing compounding the pain.

You have the power to fix this so others don't suffer and have a chance to improve their quality of life even a little.
