The United States was founded on the self-evident premise that every human being has the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. None of these rights can exist without the ability of each individual to determine their own gender identity and expression. If the United States government is to uphold any of the values of its founding, it must allow individuals to change gender designations on official documents without any obstacle of any kind. Do we believe in freedom or don't we?
