There is no reason, legal or biological, to exclude a neutral gender or neutral sex designation on official identification documents, up to and including passports. We do not exclude green eyes from official identification documents, despite that being a minority trait in this country at less than 10%. What you are asking for is deliberately inaccurate data representing the country's population, and if we refuse to accurately know our own population, how are we expected to credibly act in the benefit of populations around the globe? Exclusion is - historically - a losing game. Do not allow what is supposed to be an unbiased representation of our citizens become a petty, bigoted battleground.
