Carl Russell “People rely on their passports for many things — and without a passport reflecting who they actually are (including their legal name and lived gender), transgender people may struggle with simple activities like checking into a hotel, ordering a drink at the bar, or traveling through an airport,” he said. “This will needlessly subject individuals to humiliation and harassment and make all of us less safe.”

“Its purpose is to immediately create fear and ultimately cause discrimination, harassment and other injury to transgender, nonbinary and intersex folks,” he said.
