The proposed changes to the passport application will cause undue harm to transgender Americans and, furthermore, will make all travelers less safe. "Sex at birth" is a meaningless piece of information, since the person presenting their passport for travel or identification is not, in fact, a baby and since we do not inspect people's genitals when they board a plane. Passports, if they must mark sex/gender at all, should reflect the gender of the person holding the passport since that is what will help, say, TSA agents identify the person in front of them. "Sex at birth" is a meaningless identifier and has nothing to do with the purpose of a passport.
