If a person's photo does not match their appearance, their gender marker doesn't match their drivers license, or their name does not match the one on other documents or the one legally granted by court, they will be unable to use their passport and it will be useless. Transgender people, whether you agree with their gender identity or not, are US citizens and have the fundamental right to a passport. The right to freedom of movement is protected by the Privileges and Immunities Clause of the U.S. Constitution. It is also a part of the UN Declaration of Human Rights.
