Passports serve as a vital right and helpful aid for citizens of the United States. Since they are useful not only for traveling out of country but also establishing identity and citizenship, they allowing them to be updated to match the current reality of the applicant makes for easier navigation of their social and administrative functions.

Updating gender markers and name changes both respects the truths of the citizens with passports and also reduces confusion, danger, and disrespect when they are used in official situations. I cannot imagine a policy that denies these as anything other than hateful.
