People should be free to update their documents however they please. As long as they are getting recorded in a database, it should not matter. People who look to update their gender marker on their passports should not be punished. In fact, gender markers on passports is a new practice, one that honestly could just be removed for the ease of everyone involved. But passport updating should be a painless affair, so stop trying to make it harder for everyone. Trans people aren't raging monsters who are looking to assault people at every opportunity. There is no evidence of any trans people attacking anyone in bathrooms as some of these fearmongers think. It is absurd.
