For individuals who have completed lawful name and gender changes within their states, these changes will produce a passport that is in conflict with other identification documents, and in many cases, also in conflict with the person's appearance. Such conflicts will create unfair burdens for such individuals when travelling internationally. It is not clear how such changes do anything to protect me (a person with XX chromosomes, identifying as female and a woman) and the changes are at odds with a wealth of scientific evidence about the nature of sex and gender.
