Policies like this reflect a profound misunderstanding of biology and are rooted in nothing more than the desire to make life unnecessarily difficult for people who are simply trying to live as their authentic selves. With the great many actual issues facing our nation, I cannot understand what problem a policy like this is trying to solve. And that's because it's not solving a problem. It's cruel for cruelty's sake. There is no reason that an X marker should not be accepted on a passport or any other document for identification purposes
