As a Canadian organizer of a sport which is inclusive of transgender players, we have seen a dramatic increase in teams being unwilling to cross the US border to Canada under concern their transgender player's passports will be invalidated or seized. Our because our sport is explicitly inclusive of trans players, we see a much higher prevalence than in the general population (approximately 1 in 30, or 3.3%, while the general population is estimated at 0.5%). Even though they still make a small minority within the sport, teams are fiercely loyal and prefer to cancel matches rather than bow to discriminatory policies. Thus the new regulations are negatively impacting cis women's sport by limiting travel of their transgender teammates.
