The changes laid out by executive order in no way enhance the primary purpose of a passport: to confirm an individual's identity and nationality for international travel. The changes would be a waste of taxpayer money.

Further, the executive order ignores the conclusions of medical boards and health professionals by declaring that there is no difference between sex and gender, and restricting the definition to sex assigned at birth. Executive Orders cannot compel a change in the English language simply because of a misguided ideology.

Further, it seems likely that the executive order would put the State Department in direct violation of the injunction by the US District Court of Colorado (Zzyym v Blinken).
