The switch back to 'sex' and requirement of birth sex are an unneeded change to current policy. This will cause many problems for citizens who are judged to not conform to their sex as marked, whether by appearance, the prejudice of the document inspector, or by the citizen's own efforts to transition. Any man with a beard and proper voice will end up experiencing excess delays, suspicion, and other mistreatment merely from having been assigned female at birth. The situation may be rare, but rarity does not and should not result in perverse response from law enforcement or customs officials' ignorance. Compare with stories of Americans who spend legal tender $2 bills and are suspected criminals while acting in a lawful way, and remember that customs officials have more penalties available to them.
