I'm very concerned about whether it is constitutional or legal to rapidly make this sort of massive policy change to US passports. I support Americans' right to privacy and personal freedom to decide who they are and how they want to live. I think any policy that considers gender only a binary is misrepresentative of vetted, accepted science, and also erases the existence of intersex people (people with something other than an XX or XY expression) and those who consider themselves nonbinary.

In the light of the current climate, where constitutional law is being hotly contested, I do not think it is right to make changes of this nature to Americans' identity documents.
