

Author Full Name : AnonymousReceived Date : 02/20/2025 09:30 AMComments Received :

There should be no restrictions on gender markers for passports. As a medical professional, many medical decisions are made based off test results instead of markers on documents, even if a person came in with a document saying their bloody type, medical facilities will still test them everytime to account for their current status, because of variation. This is not so different than how gender is not a stable expression. People have the freedom to express their gender without restrictions from the government. Additionally, intersex people are born in numerous variation. Society has many cultures and different ways that genders are expressed. If someone is being identified by a passport, gender is not a necessary nor accurate way to identify an individual and should not be part of the process.