

Author Full Name : Kevin ScottReceived Date : 02/20/2025 09:55 AMComments Received :

Adding “sex at birth” requirements to passports is at best superfluous and will only serve to add time and hassle to already long TSA lines. It would be more appropriate to remove gender identification entirely as only Birthday, citizenship, name and place of birth are really needed for identification. This also could raise issues with intersex individuals or those who display secondary characteristics of other genders (e.g men with excess breast tissue). This could lead to harmful invasive inspections at TSA lines and generally makes it more challenging for individuals to travel.