As a US citizen, I am opposed to the recent move to change passports to include a person's birth sex, and to only include the options of M or F. First of all, it is inaccurate to limit birth sex to only "male" and "female," as intersex people exist, and it would be in violation of the ruling of the court case Zzyym v. Blinken to only offer M and F as options. Second of all, many people currently hold official state documentation which lists a gender different from their birth sex due to an officially recognized transition, and this change would therefore result in conflicting information between federal and state documentation, which could cause confusion at locations where this documentation must be presented, such as the airport, resulting in inefficiency. I hope that the State Department makes the correct decision and chooses not to implement this change, which will have no positive impact upon the American people.
