

Author Full Name : Heather CorderReceived Date : 02/20/2025 11:52 AMComments Received :

Every citizen is eligible for a passport in the United States and therefore every citizen has the right to apply and obtain one. To limit eligibility to those deemed "acceptable" by the government is a violation of rights. Trans people are people. Intersex people are people. Their rights are not lesser simply because the President declares it so. Therefore, you must not prevent or prohibit trans people from listing their correct sex/gender on their paperwork or any name changes that have occurred since birth. You must not violate federal laws by creating barriers for citizens to obtain proper documentation.