

Author Full Name : Jennifer ScarberryReceived Date : 02/20/2025 01:52 PMComments Received :

A passport is supposed to identify you, not define you. Biological sex is not binary, and those who do not fall neatly into one of those categories should not be forced to pick the "least worst" option in order to obtain documentation and travel. An X instead of an F would not change my height or eye color. An M instead of an F would not change my height or eye color. I identify as a cis female, which tells you nothing about me aside from some cues as to how I might have been socialized. It is an arbitrary designation that serves no purpose except to pigeonhole some people and exclude others. While they're trying to cut government spending, how about we save some ink and stop putting gender on forms all together?