Regarding the change to sex identification markers on US passports: I believe this change to be not only unnecessary but actively dangerous for US travelers. Sex identification is useless as an identifying criteria at a security checkpoint absent an invasive medical check, and furthermore not even remotely conclusive nor encompassing of the range of medical situations and histories (e.g. intersex individuals or a host of genetic conditions) that might cause a traveler's outward presentation to not match their sex assigned at birth. I'm lodging this formal and public complaint against this particular change on behalf of my friends, family, and community members that would be demonstrably harmed by it.
