Enforcing a strict M or F binary on passports does not account for millions of our citizens in this country who don't fit neatly into either category, because that's the real, living science. Intersex folks who biologically have any number of combinations of male or female parts, or none at all, whether or not those parts match their outside presenting gender. Trans folks who may present one way that wouldn't match what they were assigned at birth, which at that point isn't necessary for the identification purposes passports are meant for. If this is about preserving safety, then this M/F restriction would be one of the most unsafe things to enforce on our people.
