The changes in this proposal would not only be questionable in their constitutionality, but they would expose a minority of American citizens to dangers without a clear reason. There is no evidence that requiring trans, non-binary, or other gender non-conforming people to report themselves in the way described in this proposal would make a meaningful improvement to others. The only people who stand to benefit materially from this change are people who wish to limit or completely diminish the presence of gender non-conforming people in public life. On top of all of this, it is a waste of time and effort to enforce this, time and effort that could be better spent addressing other issues in travel safety.
