I am very concerned about these changes, if for no other reason than that I don't want airport lines being held up so that people whose genitals-at-birth don't, in the TSA's opinion, match their looks, can be searched and scrutinised further. I honestly don't think a person's genitals are any business but their own! As a woman, I don't see how this makes me safer - in fact since I am a woman with somewhat masculine features, will I personally be held up every time I travel for work, for some airport official to check my down there? That makes me very uncomfortable.
