This change to the application of passports is a vast overreach by the government, and feels entirely unnecessary compared to other issues the United States has to deal with. Spending resources to make this change will likely be extremely inefficient compared to what other avenues those resources could be used for. In addition, there are flaws with some of the required changes proposed, one of which being a lack of what to do in the case of people who are intersex. A change of this nature feels extremely unnecessary, and should instead be more inclusive of what people choose to identify as. Because of such, it would be wise to not implement these changes, and instead refocus efforts and resources on more important matters.
