This seems more like something designed to advance a regressive political ideology rather than something that could possibly advance American interests at home or abroad. Is there a compelling government interest that could possibly be served by denying accurate passports to transgender people? Is this something being asked for by customs agents or foreign governments? The answer, of course, is no, and this only serves to align ourselves with entities that impose strict gender roles upon their populations, like the Ayatollah of Iran or the Taliban.
