

Author Full Name : Nicole StewartReceived Date : 02/20/2025 08:32 PMComments Received :

Requiring passports to list the applicant's "biological sex at birth" is pointless from a security standpoint and alienates a segment of the population for no reason other than cruelty. If a person does not dress, behave, or go by a name traditionally associated with the gender norms of what they were assigned at birth, this requirement will only create confusion and hassle for both the passport holder and security personnel. Transgender and intersex individuals do not deserve to be used as a political punching bag, their existence cannot be erased by an executive order. Their identification documents should accurately reflect who they are as people and how they fit into their community.